The 3D-imaging is pretty good and you can control the star field, the number of elements and even the duration of the image." "A little jump in the psychedelic department; a vast space with a smiley moon and an all-round warm glow. Not bad at all, only one small point, it is not a native 3D, but it works very smoothly and does not give off any "blinking". Nice screensaver." During the day the weather can be very changeable and the sky a busy place for aviation activities. Solar Moons Selectable background color Wide variety of special effects 1024x768 display Clean and unobtrusive screensaver. Blue Moon Screensaver is a highly detailed NASA Solar System screen saver. Its a beautiful 3D screensaver that re-enacts the adventure of the Solar System. My Personal Favorite First up is the Moon. Planet-sized, the Moon is the only natural satellite to Earth. It is an essential part of our planet and is a key source of light on the night sky. The Moon's brightness, and apparent size, depend upon when you are observing it. At Full Moon, the Moon is about 400,000 km away, and at First Quarter it is about half that distance. Thus, you will see it at a greater apparent size and brightness than at any other time. If the time is 9 or 10pm, you could enjoy seeing the Moon as close as it gets in the sky. Everywhere else, the Moon should just be large enough to give the impression that it is a small bright object in the sky. So - it might be as close as a 0.005 degree width, (6 inches at the full Moon, and 12 inches at the First Quarter Moon) Next is the Sun. Stare at the Sun without blinking and you will start to notice changes in its color. When it is just a thin white edge, it is near its darkest level (spectral solar disk). At Full Moon, the bright disk of the Sun illuminates the sky. As the Sun gradually increases in brightness, its disk moves from the center of the sky to the edge. Soon, there is no dark disk to cast shadows on the ground. The Sun illuminates every single object and surface. You could catch sight of that very process. The brightest point in the Sun (photosphere) is always at the surface of the photosphere and varies in position with the Sun's motion across the solar disk. Pole-to-Pole, the magnetic axis of the Sun's atmosphere rotates from East to West as the Sun rotates. Next is Venus. This is the second planet from the Sun. From any vantage point in the Solar System, the Sun is the closest. Venus is the next nearest. The Sun's brightness is greatest at Full Moon, but the Solar System is viewed more or less uniformly from Earth. Thus, the Sun is greatest at the Full Moon. The Moon appears largest in the sky at 09e8f5149f
