Catching up with Mikaëlle Catching up with Mikaëlle - the film about mooring

In his memoirs, Mikaëlle Rummel talks about all the different aspects of his life and work. But he did not keep a diary. Only one day remains in June 2009; a letter, marked with a postmark of the old school in Büren an der Aare. But as soon as he reads the letter, he starts to gesticulate and the conversation turns to the very beginning of his life. At the same time, his memories start to flow. Mikaëlle Rummel: My name is Mikaëlle Rummel and I'm 52 years old. I was born at a ferry crossing point near the banks of the Aare river in Büren an der Aare. But I have never been there. I don't know the exact location. My parents didn't want me born. It may sound crazy, but I think that my mother wanted a girl and saw me as an obstacle. I don't even remember my birth. What exactly do you remember about the beginning of your life? I was told at an early age that I was adopted. Later on, I realised that my mother, my father and my adoptive family knew this for a long time, but did not tell me. In the letter my aunt sent to me, she wrote in her own handwriting the message: 'you are ours'. I saw it when I was thirteen. But I didn't know how I had become her son. Not until a couple of years later, when I found out that I was adopted. I met other families who told me that they were siblings. Were there any fears about the future? Yes, there were fears. I remember that I couldn't go to school. First, because I had no clothes. My parents had moved to Germany many years earlier and so we had our own language and our own identity, but I didn't want to assimilate. I had to wait for my parents to come back from their trips. Then I had to attend a German school. In 1951, 09e8f5149f
